User Guidelines

Users of The Stock App must comply with all SEC guidelines regarding the spread of information. Most importantly this includes a zero tolerance of insider trading or any similar activity. Similar activities would include collusion to arbitrarily influence a stock price, discussion of businesses you have worked for in the recent past, or any other knowledge that isn't available in the public domain. The Stock App reserves the right to remove any posts that are deemed to violate these rules and continued violation will result in an account ban. Traditional insiders are defined as" an officer, director, 10% stockholder and anyone who possesses inside information because of his or her relationship with the Company or with an officer, director or principal stockholder of the Company. [Insiders go] beyond just officers, directors and principal stockholders. [They are] also [] any employee who has obtained material non-public corporate information, as well as any person who has received a "tip" from an Insider of the Company concerning information about the Company that is material and nonpublic, and trades (i.e. purchase or sells) the Company's stock or other securities." (Securities and exchange commission) Further information about who is considered an insider, what trades and discussions they can perform, and what knowledge is prevented from being shared can be found on the SEC's website or at https://www.sec.gov/Archives/edgar/data/1164964/000101968715004168/globalfuture_8k-ex9904.htm#:~:text=1.,trading%20in%20the%20Company's%20stock.

Users must also adhere to The Stock Apps quality content policy. This policy is intended to ensure consistency on the site as well as preventing low effort manipulative posts. The policy goes as follows.

Posts must be researched and written by the author(s), presenting their own opinion about a topic, with the intent to provide a neutral evaluation of the pros and cons of said topic. Posts that seek solely to persuade the reader, with no effort to remove bias, will be removed. Posts that fail to display unique research or insight will also be removed. Posts about topics unrelated to the financial world will also be removed as they are beyond the scope of this website.

If a user believes their post has been incorrectly removed, they may contact a site employee for an explanation as to why the content was removed. If they would then like to modify a removed post to bring it into compliance with this policy, they are welcome to do so.

The stock app also has a zero-tolerance stance on harassment. Users should be able to use the site without worrying about personal attacks or brigading; Therefore, anyone committing such actions on the site will be banned without warning. Cogent criticism is welcome and encouraged. Ideas cannot grow in an environment where they are unable to be challenged, but if criticism is presented in a way that attacks the original author and not their ideas, it will likely be deemed as harassment.
